“The combination of scientific inspiration & strategic partnerships will be the catalyst that leads to cures.”

George Goldman

History of the Symposium:

In January 2001, Mayo Clinic presented The Judith and George Goldman Symposium on Innovative Research in Multiple Myeloma in Amelia Island, Florida. This groundbreaking three-day program assembled experts from around the world to focus on in-depth coverage of the most current research in multiple myeloma pathogenesis and disease biology. Experts from a variety of disciplines and backgrounds participated in didactic sessions, panel discussions, poster sessions, and workshops.

In January 2006, George and Judy Goldman will be sponsors of the 3rd Mayo Clinic Symposium. Focused more broadly on Hematologic Malignancies, the symposium is co-chaired by Rafael Fonseca, MD and Philip R. Greipp, MD, of the Mayo Clinic College of Medicine.

Participants in the conversation on Maximizing Donor Impact in the Pursuit of Cures are invited to sit in on sessions of the symposium.

Program Sponsor:

Partnership for Cures is a new public charity whose mission is to transform the way cures are discovered.

George Goldman, founder of Goldman Philanthropic Partnerships, recently introduced Partnership for Cures as the next step in an effort he launched five years ago to bring business rigor to medical research. Goldman Philanthropic Partnerships has developed a model for partnerships between investor-donors, researchers and research institutions that funds efforts likely to lead to breakthroughs. These partnerships engage all three parties from initial, often face-to-face discussions, through quarterly progress reports to broader sharing of research findings and applications.
